Mr. Liao had failed a May 31, 2014, simulator test over emergency procedures including engine fires, loss of hydraulic systems and flying on a single engine. After another training session, he passed a follow-up check a month later. But subsequent training in Singapore found that he had "insufficient knowledge leading to hesitations" during oral tests about what to do during an engine shutdown on takeoff or loss of electronic engine controls, according to the report.

7-2-2015 Nightly News From Key West with Greg + Wives... iPhone 6 ++ Dash Cams filming all of the Saudi Prince's since the 1980 invention of the Electric Windmill Ford Escort. $32 Billion News, Greg's News is $777 Trillion given away!! A Saudi prince pledged on Wednesday to give away his entire $32 billion fortune to charitable causes in Saudi Arabia and elsewhere in the world. The prince, Alwaleed bin Talal, said the funds would go to his charity, Alwaleed Philanthropies, for causes like disease eradication, intercultural understanding, women's empowerment, disaster relief and the electrification of isolated areas. The new pledge by one of the world's richest men follows moves by other hugely wealthy individuals to shift their fortunes into philanthropy. In a statement released online, Prince Alwaleed said his group had worked with the foundation established by Bill and Melinda Gates that had channeled billions of dollars into similar causes. Prince Alwaleed, a nephew of King Salman, holds no official position in the Saudi government and is often seen as an outsider. He is known for giving relatively frank interviews on financial and political issues that sometimes rankle officials in the normally tight-lipped kingdom. And in the only country in the world where women are barred from driving, Prince Alwaleed employs many women, who dress as they wish. Prince Alwaleed's pledge came during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan, and he described the move as guided by his Islamic faith. "With this pledge, I am honoring my lifelong commitment to what matters most — helping to build a more peaceful, equitable and sustainable world for generations to come," he said. The prince gave no time frame during which the funds would be disbursed, but he said he had formed a board of trustees to choose projects and oversee them. Most of Prince Alwaleed's wealth is in the investment firm Kingdom Holding, of which he owns 95 percent of shares. His investments include stakes in Twitter, Apple, Citigroup, Euro Disney and the News Corporation.

when those energetic particles (known as cosmic rays) strike a heavier element — one created in a star — it can blast it apart, creating a cascade of lower-mass particles. This process, known as spallation, is how the lithium, beryllium and boron found on Earth was formed, and the only reason why these elements can be found at all on our planet. These three elements are by far the rarest of all the light elements, and this process is the only reason they're around at all. The next time you see a plant, think not only of the evolutionary story that allowed it to be so, but the cosmic one, that enabled the elements essential to it to even exist. Without the most catastrophic, energetic events in the Universe, three of the lightest elements, lithium, beryllium and boron, simply would not be.
