5-17-2015 ...collection of case studies... 1. The cause of encephalitis lethargica is not known for certain. Research in 2004 suggested that the disease is due to an immune reaction and resulting damage to the basal ganglia. In this study, many of the people with encephalitis lethargica had experienced recent pharyngitis and the authors found some evidence linking the reaction to prior streptococcal throat. They hypothesised that encephalitis lethargica, Sydenham's chorea and PANDAS (pediatric autoimmune neuropsychiatric disorders associated with streptococcal infections) are mediated by variations of the post-streptococcal immune response. There is also some evidence of an autoimmune origin with antibodies (IgG) from patients with encephalitis lethargica binding to neurons in the basal ganglia and mid-brain. Western immunoblotting showed that 95% of encephalitis lethargica patients had autoantibodies reactive against human basal ganglia antigens. By contrast, antibodies reactive against the basal ganglia were found in only 2-4% of child and adult controls ($n = 173$, $P < 0.0001$). Some researchers believe that new data support the influenza hypothesis, [11] while others consider this less likely.

5-17-2015 ...collection of case studies... 2. Post-operative infection following bone-repair is a burden to patients and health care systems. Although standard operating procedures call for meticulous sterilization of bone grafts, the porous nature of bone makes it a perfect breeding ground for bacteria. As such, the rate of post-operative infection remains significant. Researchers from Thomas Jefferson University recently published an article in Clinical Orthopaedics and Related Research. They showed that a photoactive green porphyrin dye (TAPP) sticks to bone fragments and mitigates the growth of bacteria when activated by light. TAPP was shown to be stable in the dark, but produces reactive oxygen species when exposed to light, which are lethal to bacteria.

5-17-2015 ...collection of case studies... 3. Staining of cells is a basic component of pathology, allowing clinicians and researchers to identify different cell types and to track their activity. It can be a slow and laborious process, which can also cause disruption to the sample being analyzed. At University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign researchers have developed a virtual staining technique that doesn't require any actual staining while producing similar results. They're using infrared spectroscopic imaging to analyze the chemical composition of cells directly. By noting the spectral characteristics of light bouncing off the cells, the investigators were able to identify correlations that a computer can use to do quick pathology analysis. The researchers hope that the new method will drastically increase the speed of digital pathology studies, since manual aspects of staining and preparation may be avoided altogether.

5-17-2015 ...Los Alamos could have invented a Super Computer digital staining of cells instead of building the next Model 2015 H-Bombs... if our 1984 III MD Women Dictators Coup was successful last year... grin!

U.S. Commandos Kill an ISIS Leader in Syria

By HELENE COOPER
and ERIC SCHMITT

WASHINGTON — American Special Operations forces mounted a rare raid into eastern Syria early Saturday, killing a leader of the Islamic State and about a dozen militant fighters, as well as capturing his wife and freeing an 18-year-old Yazidi woman whom Pentagon officials said had been held as a slave.

In the first successful raid by American ground troops since the military campaign against the Islamic State began last year, two dozen Delta Force commandos entered Syria aboard Black Hawk helicopters and V-22 Ospreys and killed the leader, a man known as Abu Sayyaf. One American military official described him as the Islamic State's "emir of oil and gas."

Raid Comes as Militant Group Has Made Gains in Iraq

Even so, Abu Sayyaf is a mid-level leader in the organization — one terrorism analyst compared him to Al Capone's accountant — and likely is replaceable in fairly short order. And the operation, while successful, comes as the Islamic State has been advancing in the Iraqi city of Ramadi, demonstrating that the fight against the Sunni militant group in both Iraq and Syria remains very fluid.

Yet the Pentagon's description of a nighttime raid that found its intended target deep inside Syria without any American troops being wounded or killed illustrates not only the effectiveness of the Delta Force, but of improving American intelligence on shadowy Islamic State leaders.

A Defense Department official said Islamic State fighters who defended their building and Abu Sayyaf tried to use women and children as shields, but that the Delta Force commandos "used very precise fire" and "separated

5-17-2015 1,001 Medical Case Studies published by Greg + Wives in Key West... Laparoscopic surgery has come a long way lately, but it still relies on rigid instruments that slide in and out of the body on linear tracks. This limitation prevents many operations from being conducted in a minimally invasive fashion, requiring surgeons convert to open procedures and to get their hands dirty to move organs and tissues out of the way. An engineering team from Sant'Anna School of Advanced Studies in Italy took inspiration from octopus tentacles to build a device that can bend on demand, perhaps one day resulting in flexible endoscopic surgical tools that can reach anywhere in the body.

5-16-2015 "Lost to Wars... Soul-Mate and... 1,001 Nobel's in 2015 and more from Berkeley... grin!! CLAIRE stands for "cathodoluminescence activated imaging by resonant energy transfer." Invented by researchers with the U.S. Department of Energy (DOE)'s Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (Berkeley Lab) and the University of California (UC) Berkeley, CLAIRE extends the incredible resolution of electron microscopy to the dynamic imaging of soft matter. "Traditional electron microscopy damages soft materials and has therefore mainly been used to provide topographical or compositional information about robust inorganic solids or fixed sections of biological specimens," says chemist Naomi Ginsberg, who leads CLAIRE's development. "CLAIRE allows us to convert electron microscopy into a new non-invasive imaging modality for studying soft materials and providing spectrally specific information about them on the nanoscale." Ginsberg says. "We should also be able to perform other studies in membrane biophysics to see how molecules diffuse in complex environments, and we'd like to be able to study molecular recognition at the single molecule level." In addition, Ginsberg and her group will be using CLAIRE to study the dynamics of nanoscale systems for soft materials in general. "We would love to be able to observe crystallization processes or to watch a material made of nanoscale components anneal or undergo a phase transition," she says. "We would also love to be able to watch the electric double layer at a charged surface as it evolves, as this phenomenon is crucial to battery science."
