FLASH FORWARD... 5-22-2015 Another Morning at Starbucks... Boeing has built two X-37B spacecraft for the Air Force. The first launched in April 2010, setting off speculation over the vessel's purposes. Some suggested that the craft had something to do with space weapons, which the Pentagon denied. It landed in December that year. The second orbiter was sent up from March 2011 to June 2012. The first craft made a second flight, launching in December 2012 and returning 674 days later, in October 2014. The Air Force was not saying which of the two was packed inside an Atlas 5 rocket on the launchpad at Cape Canaveral, Fla. "We are excited about our fourth X-37B mission," Randy Walden, the director of the Air Force Rapid Capabilities Office, said in a statement released last month. "With the demonstrated success of the first three missions, we're able to shift our focus from initial checkouts of the vehicle to testing of experimental payloads." The rocket lifted off Wednesday morning. One of the experiments the Air Force has talked about is an improved version of an electric thruster. Unlike conventional thrusters employing chemical reactions, electric thrusters are more efficient, accelerating charged ions through electric fields. Electric thrusters are common on commercial satellites, but the Air Force needs more powerful propulsion. Aerojet Rocketdyne has built thrusters for three military satellites that run at 5 kilowatts, or about four times the power of those on commercial satellites. The thruster on the X-37B is a modified version, intended to improve performance, although it still generates less than a tenth of a pound of thrust. "But it does it very, very efficiently from a fuel standpoint," said Fred C. Wilson, director of business development at Aerojet Rocketdyne. "It's a higher-power, higher-performance device." NASA, which collaborated on the development of the thruster, hopes that similar technology can be used to propel cargo ships to Mars, part of an eventual mission to send astronauts there. Last month, the space agency selected Aerojet Rocketdyne to develop and test a 100-kilowatt electric thruster.

NY Times has ISIS win without the 1980 Electric Windmill Ford Escort secret weapon never used to send the Moslems to Hell in 1980. Then we get this "Waco-biker defiant about negative stereotypes" by Ines Novacic. I know Ines would write about bisexual men defiant about negative stereotypes without writing about the MS virus they have given to millions of SWF and will give to another million SWF in 2016 if Obama is not charged with being defiant about OJ with Syphilis and giving it to others... as a negative stereotype. Obama has never mentioned the MS Virus, syphilis + black men giving it to others yet this is more of a stenotype than prostitutes overcharging, on your Key West vacation. Grin. "Inquiry Finds Misconduct by a Top Surgeon, Paolo Macchiarini" By HENRY FOUNTAINMAY NY Times An investigation in Sweden into a surgeon who is a pioneer in the field of regenerative medicine has found that he committed scientific misconduct by omitting or falsifying information about the conditions of three patients in medical journals. Dr. Bengt Gerdin, the independent investigator who looked into accusations against the surgeon, Dr. Paolo Macchiarini, said that in several journal papers, including one in The Lancet in 2011, Dr. Macchiarini had "omitted some data and also fabricated or falsified some data regarding the postoperative state of patients" on whom he had performed experimental groundbreaking operations. The investigation was ordered last fall by officials at the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm. As a visiting professor there, Dr. Macchiarini conducted research and operated on three patients at an affiliated hospital, removing diseased or damaged windpipes and implanting replacements made of plastic and treated with stem cells and drugs to encourage the growth of new tissue.

Two of the patients, the Eritrean man and a man from Baltimore, have died, and the third, a Turkish woman, has been hospitalized in intensive care for nearly three years.

The investigation was prompted by complaints filed by four doctors involved in the patients' care, who said that the conditions of the patients were never as good as Dr. Macchiarini had claimed in the papers. The Karolinska Institute released Dr. Gerdin's report on Tuesday, but only in Swedish. An English translation should be ready by next week, officials at the institute said, and Dr. Macchiarini and others will have two weeks to comment on the report. Then Anders Hamsten, the vice chancellor of the institute, will decide how to proceed, probably in June. The finding of misconduct was first reported by the Swedish newspaper Svenska Dagbladet on Tuesday. In an email message, Dr. Macchiarini, who has most recently been working in Russia, said he did not read Swedish and therefore was awaiting the English translation

"Tourist From Spain Is Killed by Bus in Manhattan" By AL BAKER A 68-year-old woman visiting New York City from Spain was killed on Wednesday when a charter bus struck her as she tried to cross a street in Upper Manhattan, the police said. The woman, Wanda Canestri, was crossing Amsterdam Avenue at midblock, between 112th and 113th Streets, around 3 p.m., the police said. Her sister was with her at the time, they said. The police said the investigation was continuing but it appeared that Ms. Canestri had been walking from the west side of Amsterdam Avenue to the east side. The bus was traveling northbound on the same street. A law-enforcement official said Ms. Canestri was struck by the bus and pinned underneath it. The police said Ms. Canestri had not been a passenger on the bus, which was involved in ferrying children to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Before the accident, it had been pulled over and idling in an area reserved for buses waiting to drop off or retrieve passengers. The bus, a Mercedes, remained at the scene several hours after the episode, cordoned off by police tape as officers and fire officials examined its underside. Douglas Marques, a manager at Artopolis Espresso, a bakery and coffee bar a block from the scene, said the area was particularly crowded lately because of graduation ceremonies at Columbia University. "They closed down the block pretty fast," he said. Ms. Canestri was a guest at the Millennium Hotel in Times Square, the official said. She was pronounced dead at the scene. By Wednesday night, her family in Europe had been notified, the police said. The driver of the bus passed a field sobriety test, the police said, adding that there was no apparent suspicion of criminality, though the case was under investigation by the Police Department's Collision Investigation Squad.

A woman who admitted to shoving a Hindu man off a New York City subway platform to his death in an attack motivated by religious animus has been sentenced to 24 years in prison. The woman, Erika Menendez, was sentenced on Wednesday after pleading guilty to manslaughter for killing Sunando Sen in December 2012 at the 40th Street-Lowery Street subway station in Sunnyside, Queens. Ms. Menendez, 33, of Queens, pushed Mr. Sen off a No. 7 train platform; an oncoming train crushed him.

When freed 1,001 Invention Projects on a CD and my web page

Ms. Menendez told the police she did it because she believed he was Hindu or Muslim, groups she has hated since the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks. The Queens district attorney, Richard A. Brown, called the killing "every subway commuter's worst nightmare." The district attorney's office said in March that it had accepted Ms. Menendez's guilty plea to manslaughter, a lesser charge than murder, because of her "substantial psychiatric history and drug problems." Though Ms. Menendez had been deemed competent to stand trial, "at trial there would have been open questions and gray areas that may have resulted in a hung jury," Kevin R. Ryan, a spokesman for the district attorney's office, said in March.
