the Front Page of the New York Times... His first attack came on June 10, the police said, when he struck a woman in the face with what appears to have been a hammer wrapped in a plastic bag. The last attack came on June 15, around 4 p.m., when he hit a woman working at a dry-cleaning shop after showing her a sexually suggestive message in Chinese on his cellphone. She is still too terrified to return to work, her employer said. That night, Mr. Shaw had dinner with a had encountered in some time.

Over the previous six days, a man had attacked at least four women in Manhattan, smashing them in the face with a heavy object wrapped in a plastic bag. The common thread in the seemingly random attacks: All of the victims were of Asian descent.

Mr. Shaw with the actor Russell Crowe in a photograph posted on Mr. Shaw's blog.

The attacks and the resulting manhunt for Mr. Shaw, identified through a surveillance video, spread fear in Chinatown and other Asian enclaves across the city.

In one of the episodes, the police said, the man complained to his victim that Asian women would not talk to him. But could such a thing really explain the assaults?

What happened next would also shock: Mr. Shaw said on his blog that he planned to place his neck in a noose tied to an elevator at the bottom of a shaft. The next person who pushed a button to send the elevator up would, he wrote, "murder me without even knowing it."

he struck a Asian woman in the face with what appears to have been a hammer wrapped in a plastic bag for revenge...

6-29-2015 Nightly News From Key West with Greg + Wives... At some point, he became fixated on Asian culture and Asian women... rejecting Black Women!! On his blog, he had admitted to the attacks and had blamed being rejected by Asian women for committing them. He had tried to talk to nearly 1,500 in less than 350 days, he wrote, and none had said hello: "I just couldn't understand why Asian Women didn't find me attractive." He attacked at least four women in Manhattan, smashing them in the face with a heavy object wrapped in a plastic bag. The common thread in the seemingly random attacks: All of the victims were of Asian. In 2013, he was in jail on Rikers Island. Set free he was not watched by our 1984 II Dictators, Why? Mr. Shaw told a friend he was moving back home to Toronto. But he spent much of the period from June 2013 to June 2014 on Rikers Island after being convicted of stealing the sunglasses, as well as an iPad from a hair salon and an iPhone from the front seat of an ambulance. His first attack came on June 10, the police said, when he struck a woman in the face with what appears to have been a hammer wrapped in a plastic bag. The last attack came on June 15, around 4 p.m., when he hit a woman working at a dry-cleaning shop after showing her a sexually suggestive message in Chinese on his cellphone. She is still too terrified to return to work, her employer said. That night, Mr. Shaw had dinner with a female friend of Asian descent at a barbecue restaurant in Manhattan. She did not want to be named because she did not want to be linked to him. Shaw wrote that he had spent a weekend in early June trying to pick up Asian women unsuccessfully. "I've been rejected so much I feel absolutely numb," he wrote. He announced a plan to "hit over a million Asian Women in the face with a stick." "If I'm correct- I should be reincarnated into a Rat. Guess what? Your life after death already exist.

6-27-2015 Nightly News From Key West with Greg + Wives... To invoke Freud and Dora today, though, is to run the risk of sounding instantly obsolete. The ideas of psychoanalysis, its very vocabulary – those familiar terms like "id, ego and superego," "the Oedipus complex," "penis envy," "castration anxiety" – come across, for many, as quaint souvenirs pulled from a dusty attic. The very project of psychoanalysis – to cure through self-awareness, through an exhaustive exploration of the patient's unconscious mind – is increasingly at odds with what most people seem to want: to fix their problems as quickly and painlessly as possible. With millions of Americans now taking pills for depression, expecting to feel better in a matter of weeks, the concept of signing up for a psychological treatment that can stretch on for years no longer seems to make the kind of sense it used to.

Much of the research was looking specifically at the effects of cognitive-behavioral therapy, which tends to last an average of 12 to 20 weeks, it focuses on altering particular thoughts and behaviors that are causing distress, rather than – as in psychoanalysis – trying to understand how they've come to be and what else might be lurking underneath. In part because C.B.T. is designed to show measurable, observable changes in a relatively short time, it is a natural partner for f.M.R.I. research, which works by taking a kind of before-and-after snapshot, looking at which parts of the brain show an increase or decrease in activity after therapy.
