6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley died alone at least 300 light-years from the nearest stellar neighbor. That's almost 100 times the distance between our sun and its nearest neighbor, Proxima Centauri, which is over 4 light-years away. Proxima Centauri will burn its H for the next 4 trillion years in a much different way than our Sun burns its Hydrogen. This is the article Berkeley should have written!

6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley died alone...

6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley died alone, 3 nearest stars at 4 light years and Berkeley has killed them off thier list of things to do today!

6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley's newest news is interesting but way to far out when Jewish Aliens most likely are 4 light years from Earth.

When freed 1,001 Invention Projects on a CD and my web page

6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley wrote Type Ia supernovae are thought to be spawned in stellar binaries, where material is siphoned from one, less massive partner to the other, usually a dense white dwarf. When the stellar plasma reaches a threshold, the system detonates and produces a supernova. "The companion was either a lower-mass white dwarf that eventually got too close and was tragically fragmented into a ring that was cannibalized by the primary star, or a regular star from which the primary white dwarf star stole sips of gas from its outer layers," said lead researcher Melissa Graham, of the University of California, Berkeley. "Either way, this transfer of material caused the primary to become unstably massive and explode as a Type Ia supernova." ANALYSIS: What Makes a Supernova Blow? Using Hubble, Graham's team zoomed in on the sites of 3 apparently galaxy-less supernovae that occurred between 2008 and 2010. They found that these examples were indeed exiled stars that died alone at least 300 light-years from the nearest stellar neighbor. That's almost 100 times the distance between our sun and its nearest neighbor, Proxima Centauri, which is over 4 light-years away.

6-8-2015 University of California, Berkeley will die alone looking at the stars never talking to Jewish Aliens unless they zoom their futuristic telescopes that can hear + see Jewish aliens at the 3 stars that are 4 light years from Earth.
