Researchers from the Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) Cancer Center and Boston University School of Medicine (BUSM) have identified the first potential treatment targeting a pathway by which several aggressive tumors maintain their ability to proliferate. Treatment with a small molecule that blocks a key step in that pathway - the alternative lengthening of telomeres (ALT) pathway - was able to inhibit the growth and survival of ALT-positive tumor cells.

1-18-2015 Mary Exaggerating Role Playing a Goddess of Inspiration... "When a man is tired of London, he is tired of life," observed the writer Samuel Johnson in the eighteenth century. In fact, research published today suggests such a man may be merely living in the wrong postcode. A study of 56,000 Londoners found that a person's life satisfaction depends, at least in part, on whether their personality suits the place where they live. Overall, the analysis of personality-neighborhood interactions showed that openness to experience, agreeableness, and conscientiousness were differently associated with life satisfaction of individuals depending on their residential location and specific characteristics of those locations. This suggests that finding the best place to live will depend on the match between individual dispositions and neighborhood characteristics. Dr Jason Rentfrow from the Department of Psychology and a Fellow of Fitzwilliam College at the University of Cambridge. "Granted, most people don't have the luxury of complete control over where they live, but given their budgets, people can decide whether it's more important to live in the centre of town, where daily life is vibrant and accommodation is small, or further out where daily life is slower but space is more plentiful. Making the decision that fits with your personality could have an effect on your overall life satisfaction."

1-18-2015 Mary Exaggerating Role Playing a Goddess of Inspiration...

1-18-2015 Mary Exaggerating Role Playing a Goddess of Inspiration... Killer of American Sniper was exaggerating his military experiences... and got caught in the lie so he shot them in the back. Cameras were watching this double murder. Same as the Drones kills are watch so there is a video marked Secret. According to the as yet unconfirmed rumor, Eddie Routh is alleged to have exaggerated his service in the Marines to claim hazardous service among the ranks of the elite Scout Snipers. While all Marines are trained as riflemen only a select few complete the intensive training to qualify as Scout Snipers. Marines only receive the designation as a Scout Sniper after successfully completing the rigorous training of a U.S.M.C. Scout Sniper School. The Scout Sniper Training Course is currently 12 weeks long and is considered to be one of the most difficult schools in the military with an attrition rate of 60 percent or higher which is exceptional given that the criteria for admission is in itself very high. The elite Scout Snipers specialized training allows them to provide close reconnaissance and surveillance to the infantry battalion. A Scout Sniper is highly skilled in field craft and long range marksmanship to enable them to deliver long range precision fire on carefully selected targets from concealed positions. As elite warriors, Scout Snipers, have a unique and somewhat whimsical community subculture, even within the unique subculture of the Marines itself. A qualified Scout Sniper is known as a Hog. The term "hog" is actually an acronym derived from the title "Hunter Of Gunmen", which is the colloquial name for a trained sniper. All other members of scout sniper platoon who have not graduated from Scout/Sniper school are considered "pigs", or "Professionally Instructed Gunmen". While all Marines are considered elite soldiers, Scout Snipers could be considered the elite of the elite. Falsely claiming status as a Scout Sniper would be regarded as an act of "stolen valor" by falsely claiming service with an elite unit or as a highly trained expert. If the rumor is true, it may well provide the motive behind the seemingly senseless double murder of two men who were attempting to help a fellow veteran reputed to have been struggling with PTSD. If Eddie Ray Routh was exaggerating his military service record to claim service as an elite Scout Sniper, this may have been part of the reason why Chris Kyle stepped up to assist a struggling fellow veteran. As a decorated sniper himself, Kyle would have understood the pressures a fellow sniper would have been exposed to. It may also provide the reason Routh snapped and turned his gun on his fellow veterans. On a gun range, a fake would be apparent and he would likely have quickly been exposed as lacking the unique skills and knowledge expected of an experienced sniper. Did Chris Kyle see through his false claims? If Eddie Routh was exaggerating his military experiences and he was already mentally unstable, he may well have begun to believe his own lies and being exposed may have "burst his bubble". Faced with exposure, did Eddie Ray Routh strike out against Kyle and Littlefield? Was that the reason he shot his companions in the back? It is important to note that this article is merely reporting the rumor circulating within the SEAL community and is not being reported as fact at this time. The investigation into the double murder is ongoing. The Erath County Sheriff Department was contacted for a comment but have thus far failed to respond.

USA Patriot Act, which gave the United States more authority to collect intelligence and pointed America's surveillance apparatus at its citizens. Politicians and civil rights advocates on both sides of the Atlantic bristled at that suggestion, and at a string of arrests in which French officials used a new anti terrorism law to crack down on what previously would have been considered free speech. One man was sentenced to six months in prison for shouting support for the Charlie Hebdo attackers. Up to 100 others are under investigation for remarks that support or tried to justify terrorism, authorities said. Dominique de Villepin, the former French prime minister, warned against the urge for "exceptional" measures. "The spiral of suspicion created in the United States by the Patriot Act and the enduring legitimization of torture or illegal detention has today caused that country to lose its moral compass," he wrote in Le Monde, the French newspaper.

cancer can spread beyond the prostate gland and become an extraprostatic extension (EPE). Currently, contrast enhanced magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) is used to detect and diagnose prostate cancer. This technique involves injecting patients with a contrast agent to identify where blood flows. This is important because cancerous tissues often undergo angiogenesis. However, there is a problem in that tumors are sometimes indistinguishable from the surrounding healthy tissue and therefore avoid detection. Now researchers and doctors at UC San Diego and UCLA have developed a novel approach to imaging these tumors using diffusion MRI while getting rid of the distortions that come with the technique. Diffusion MRI measures the diffusion of water in biological tissue. Tumors are denser than healthy tissue and thus restrict the flow of water. The downside to diffusion MRI is that it is susceptible to magnetic artifacts which are distortions in the MR image due to inhomogeneities in the field. Water is an inhomogeneity because it is considered a diamagnetic substance. These distortions can place tumors as much as a half inch (1.2 centimeters) away from the actual location, which can be a major problem. To correct the error, the researchers developed a new imaging method called RSI-MRI, or restriction spectrum imaging-MRI. This approach adjusts for the magnetic field distortions and measures the water diffusion in cancer cells. This technique can also predict tumor grade. In the study, RSI-MRI was able to successfully identify eight out of nine patients with EPE whereas the standard MRI used currently only identified two out of nine.
