I don't thik so. By Amaka Uchegbu Staff reporter Yale News Thursday, January 22, 2015 Unnecessary course requirements are keeping pre-med attrition rates at Yale College high, according to undergraduates interviewed. The pre-med sequence requires students to take specific science courses as well as one year of English. Of 10 pre-med undergraduates interviewed, eight said that large class sizes are hindering students' ability to engage with the subject material. In some instances, the large class sizes are even dissuading these students from pursuing medicine, some students said. "I think a very small percentage of people come to Yale and then decide they want to be doctors because of the classes," said Molecular, Cellular and Developmental Biology major Joel Bervell '17, who is also on the pre-med track, adding that the classes simply do not inspire students. The pre-med sequence at Yale requires that undergraduates take at least one year of each of the following: biology, general chemistry, organic chemistry and physics, as well as other courses such as statistics and biochemistry. Bervell said that large introductory science classes made it harder for him to get to know people in his classes and form study groups. Dean of the School of Medicine Robert Alpern noted that the large class sizes in pre-med courses resulted from a resource constraint. Having smaller classes, he said, requires hiring more faculty, which in turn costs the University more money. "I think the more you can teach science and math in small groups, the better it is," Alpern said. "It's a question of cost." Other popular programs of study at Yale do not necessarily suffer from the same dearth of smaller courses. Caroline Ayinon '17, a chemistry major on the pre-med track, noted that there are plenty of seminars in the Political Science Department. In contrast, the large science majors do not have classes that allow students to closely interact in smaller environments with professors and fellow classmates. Most students interviewed voiced concern about Yale's biology sequence, consisting of Biology 101 through 104, that pre-med students must complete. "Most people don't like Biology 101 or 102 because you are thrown into it, and it seems like a weird conglomeration of facts that don't connect together," Bervell said, though he acknowledged that the University has been trying to improve the courses. Bervell said he was more concerned about the discrepancy between the quality of science and social science lectures. He said he has found political science lectures, such as "Bioethics and Law," more engaging than his biology courses. Andi Shahu MED '17, who studied biology and French at Johns Hopkins University, noted that pre-med requirements vary by college and that it is important that colleges prepare students enough to be able to apply wherever they want. Alpern, who co-chaired the Committee to Establish the Scientific Foundation for Future Physicians in 2009, said that he would prefer a move towards competency-based assessments for medical school admission. He said that many students take sufficiently rigorous high school courses to prepare them for medical school, adding that it is not always necessary for such students to take college science courses. However, Alpern noted that undergraduate institutions opposed competency-based assessments because they did not want to assume the responsibility of certifying the competency of their students. To improve attrition rates in Yale's pre-med track, Bervell suggested creating a "buddy system" that would link freshmen interested in the pre-med track to upperclassmen who have completed their pre-med requirements in order to offer support and information about the process. "I've wavered back and forth in regards to how committed I am to pre-med," Bervell said, adding that having a student mentor might have prevented this uncertainty. For its 2014-15 admissions cycle, the Yale School of Medicine implemented new requirements for applicants.

Researchers from the Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) Cancer Center and Boston University School of Medicine (BUSM) have identified the first potential treatment targeting a pathway by which several aggressive tumors maintain their ability to proliferate. Treatment with a small molecule that blocks a key step in that pathway - the alternative lengthening of telomeres (ALT) pathway - was able to inhibit the growth and survival of ALT-positive tumor cells.

Now, a new study published in the Journal of Neurology, Neurosurgery & Psychiatry - a journal of The BMJ - Doesn't suggests any way a Wife would know if her husband was bisexual as in 99% of Medical Journal Articles this is notes but not in this article by Prof. Kermode, Dr. Fabíz Pedrini and their team Led by researchers from the University of Colorado Boulder. At first glance, the Colorado movie theater shooting case seems simple. James Holmes admitted to the attack that left 12 dead and 70 injured. At first glance you would not think the University should be sued for "Wrongful Deaths" but the Top Brass at 1984 II HQ know they are guilty as Hell. James Holmes was a grad student at the University of Colorado. The University created this killer as certain as "American Sniper" was created by the Pentagon in "Times" when the 1980 Model Electric Windmill Car should have bankrupted Saudia Arabia, Mecca and the Profit but for Pentagon profits of $777 Trillion and to glory of Drone Cheers not Cheers from Wives who Husbands win a Nobel in Medicine. 184 kills are kills of Nobels in Medicine We lost!

A woman who allegedly pointed a loaded handgun at another tourist and threatened to shoot her in a Duval Street hotel room was arrested early Monday morning, according to Key West police. Christine Ann Land, 42, of Clermont, faces charges of felony aggravated assault with a deadly weapon without intent to kill, misdemeanor improper exhibition of a firearm and misdemeanor use of a firearm under the influence of alcohol. Land has a concealed weapon permit to carry the .38-caliber Taurus handgun valid through 2018, according to an arrest report. Police responded to the Duval House, 815 Duval St., at 3 a.m. with weapons drawn as they approached the room where a woman had locked herself in the bathroom and called 911, reports say. Police found Land on the porch smoking a cigarette and the gun was in her purse, reports say. One officer removed the gun and unloaded it after finding a bullet in the chamber and six in the magazine while another officer held Land at gunpoint, reports say. Land told police she had been drinking on Duval Street and went back to her hotel room but found the door locked, reports say. She had no key, so she banged on the door in an effort to wake her friend, who was asleep inside. A man also staying in the room had returned without a key and was sleeping on the door mat near the front porch when Land arrived, he told police. He said Land was screaming and at one point banging on the door with a fire extinguisher in an effort to wake the woman inside, reports say. Once the door was opened, the man went into the room and laid on the bed while the two women argued, reports say. The alleged victim told police that during the argument, Land pointed a black handgun at her and said, "I'm going to shoot you." When asked if she feared for her life, the woman told police "Yes and no," adding that Land is her friend. She also told police she had been shot with a .22-caliber bullet in the past in an unrelated incident. A message left at the Duval House seeking comment was not returned Monday. Land was taken to Monroe County Detention Center on Stock Island where she remained Monday on $20,000 bail. Land has no prior arrest history in Monroe County, nor any history with the Florida Department of Corrections, according to records.

Researchers from the Massachusetts General Hospital (MGH) Cancer Center and Boston University School of Medicine (BUSM) have identified the first potential treatment targeting a pathway by which several aggressive tumors maintain their ability to proliferate. Treatment with a small molecule that blocks a key step in that pathway - the alternative lengthening of telomeres (ALT) pathway - was able to inhibit the growth and survival of ALT-positive tumor cells.
