2-19-2015 As per the latest report of Wall Street Journal, Apple has decided to design new smart watch without health monitoring device. Hence, Apple watch will lack all the health sensor such as stress factors, blood pressure and heart rate monitor. Getting 1,001 Nobels in Medicine a Year will be helping Apple reinvent the "Alarm Clock" I must have bought several over the years from "Radio Shack". The Radio Shack on Duval is closing, 20 to 50% off but only 1 item for 50% off is batteries. Does not look like the 1984 II numb Nuts in Key West are going to make the Toshiba at 50% off before they are sold out... 2-19-2015 We show that the tensile strength of limpet teeth can reach values higher than spider silk, considered currently to be the strongest biological material, and only comparable to the strongest commercial carbon fibres. We have also proved that the strengths, in our investigated range, are relatively size-independent using small-scale in situ tensile testing. Limpet teeth structures therefore highlight the efficiency of biological control in assembling a composite structure of nanofibrous goethite for optimal strength behavior. The goethite nanofibres are expected to dictate the flaw tolerance of the resultant composite owing to their diameters being below a critical threshold value of the order of tens of nanometres. This work demonstrates a high-strength composite found in nature and highlights a design strategy towards strong, engineered composites reinforced with a high volume fraction of nanofibrous material. As the limpet tooth is effective at resisting failure owing to abrasion, as demonstrated during rasping of the tooth over rock surfaces, corresponding structural design features are expected to be significant for novel biomaterials with extreme strength and hardness, such as next-generation dental restorations.

But in that fateful year, everything changed: Objects now follow different rules depending on their size, and we can never be sure where they are or what they are doing.

2-18-2015 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020... That is how Dr. Michael Bennick, the medical director for patient experience at Yale-New Haven Hospital, solved a problem. He noticed a question on a Medicare survey asking, Is it quiet in your room at night? Maybe, Dr. Bennick thought, what is really being asked is: Can you get a good night's sleep without interruption? Is it really necessary to wake patients again and again to take blood pressure and pulse rates, to draw blood, to give medications? He issued instructions for his unit. No more routinely awakening patients for vital signs. And plan the timing of medications, outside intensive care units, three-quarters of drugs can be given before patients go to sleep and again in the morning. Then there were the blood tests. "Doctors love blood tests," Dr. Bennick said, and want results first thing in the morning when they make rounds. That meant waking patients in the wee hours. "I told the resident doctors in training: 'If you are waking patients at 4 in the morning for a blood test, there obviously is a clinical need. So I want to be woken, too, so I can find out what it is.'" No one, he said, ever called him. Those middle-of-the-night blood draws vanished.

2-18-2015 State Department State Department spokeswoman:
Call for using jobs to combat terror 'too nuanced' for critics Published February 18, 2015 FoxNews.com State Department's Marie Harf ISIS remarks backfire State Department spokeswoman Marie Harf, after coming under fire for suggesting a way to fight the Islamic State and all terrorism is by creating jobs, has an answer for her critics: Her argument is just "too nuanced" for them to understand.
Harf, in TV interviews Tuesday night, stood by her original remarks and said she was speaking about a comprehensive approach to combating "extremism." Harf said that means airstrikes in the short-term, and going after "root causes" like poor economic conditions in the long-term. "Longer term, we cannot kill every terrorist around the world, nor should we try," Harf said on CNN. "How do you get at the root causes of this? Look, it might be too nuanced an argument for some, like I've seen over the past 24 hours some of the commentary out there, but it's really the smart way that Democrats, Republicans, military commanders, our partners in the Arab world think we need to combat this." Harf went on to say the approach doesn't fit "into a sound bite," when asked to respond to the intense criticism, on social media and elsewhere, of her original remarks. On Tuesday, Rob O'Neill, former Navy SEAL Team 6 member, told Fox News a "military strategy" is what's needed to fight ISIS. "They get paid to cut off heads -- to crucify children, to sell slaves and to cut off heads and I don't think that a change in career path is what's going to stop them," he said. O'Neill, who claims to have fired the shot that killed Usama bin Laden, warned that the problem is spreading. "We can't let it happen," he said. "It'll go to Saudi Arabia, it'll hit Jordan." Harf first pointed to jobs as a counter-ISIS strategy during an interview Monday night on MSNBC -- after ISIS-aligned militants slaughtered 21 Coptic Christians in Libya. "We're killing a lot of them, and we're going to keep killing more of them. ... But we cannot win this war by killing them," Harf said on MSNBC's "Hardball." "We need... to go after the root causes that leads people to join these groups, whether it's lack of opportunity for jobs, whether --" At that point, Harf was interrupted by host Chris Matthews, who pointed out, "There's always going to be poor people. There's always going to be poor Muslims." Harf continued to argue that the U.S. should work with other countries to "help improve their governance" and "help them build their economies so they can have job opportunities for these people." She said: "If we can help countries work at the root causes of this -- what makes these 17-year-old kids pick up an AK-47 instead of trying to start a business?" Harf stood by the remarks Tuesday night on CNN, and on MSNBC. CNN host Wolf Blitzer challenged her statements, asking if she thinks these young men might not turn to terror if they just had a job. Harf called that a "gross oversimplification." Blitzer pointed out that some of the world's most notorious terrorists, including bin Laden, came from wealth and privilege. Harf acknowledged that point. On Twitter, she also defended herself by quoting other leaders, including former President George W. Bush, who has pointed to the need to fight poverty as a way to fight terrorism.

2-17-2015 How many There are 100 billion to 200 billion galaxies in the universe. Billions of galaxies have been observed, but only a very small number may hold the key to explaining much of cosmic history. These galaxies – which are far away, moving away fast and very old – are called "high-redshifted" galaxies, so named because they appear red due to the Doppler effect. People are excited about galaxies at high redshift ( $z > 6$ ) these 100 billion to 200 billion galaxies in the universe. The universe is expanding at an increasing rate, a finding that contradicts the laws of physics as they are currently understood, as one would expect gravity to make the universe's expansion slow down. The work was published in the Astrophysical Journal. Yale professor of physics and study co-author, is a member – is focused on studying the light emitted by supernovae. Light that comes from supernovae that are moving away from the Earth to have a wavelength that is slightly longer than it would be otherwise. Fortunately, the light emitted by supernovae comes in only certain wave lengths, so by comparing data taken from actual supernovae to an idealized model, scientists can reason the velocity with which a supernova is moving toward or away from the Earth. This study figured out a way to make those velocity estimates better by comparing snapshot measurements to measurements taken over time.

June Gruber, professor of psychology at the University of Colorado Boulder and the other senior author of the study, said in an email that the results showing positive emotions as an important ingredient for cooperation were not surprising. From an evolutionary perspective, positive emotions serve a special role in building and maintaining vital social bonds, she explained. These emotions are a critical piece of the glue that ties humans together and helps people survive in social communities, she added. In all the games, it was advantageous for each individual to keep as much money to himself, but it was better for the group if everyone decided to cooperate.
