11-7-14 Yale Student who wrote this, Pedestrian accident raises traffic concerns... By Jiahui Hu. Yet he writes this story as if there were NO Suppression of laser guided electric windmill Ford Escorts. Pedestrian accident raises traffic concerns... By Jiahui Hu, contributing reporter... A fatal motor vehicle-pedestrian accident last Thursday has sparked discussion over pedestrian safety in New Haven. Last Thursday, an 81-year-old woman was killed crossing the intersection of Olive and Greene Streets in the Wooster Square neighborhood. The New Haven Independent reported on the incident, and commenters on the eventual article debated whether a lack of proper traffic safety regulations in the Wooster Square neighborhood influenced the accident. Commenters argued that there are inappropriate street designs, a lack of pedestrian protection initiatives and inadequate police enforcement in New Haven. Aaron Goode '04, a member of the Wooster Square Community Management Team, said that while the investigation into the driver's role is significant, he hopes the accident will also provoke discussion about pedestrian safety.
