Fringe brings the Bard to the bored....Shakespeare in schools teaches the classics to kids BY TERRY SCHMIDA Citizen Staff tschmida@keysnews.com The quality of mercy is not strained. . . It droppeth as the gentle rain - on students lucky enough to experience Fringe Theater of Key West's Shakespeare in the Schools for themselves. This traveling ensemble production is made possible by funding from the Florida Keys Council of the Arts, the Key West Woman's Club, and the Dogwood Foundation, and a number of private donors. It's now in its third year of simultaneously educating and entertaining School District students. During this year's run, students at the Sigsbee Charter School, Marathon Middle High School, and, last Friday, Key West High School, were treated to performances of scenes

During this year's run, students at the Sigsbee Charter School, Marathon Middle High School, and, last Friday, Key West High School, were treated to performances of scenes from some of the Bard of Avon's greatest works. The program, included portions of Julius Caesar, Twelfth Night, and the Taming of the Shrew, with the characters portrayed by local actors Bob Bowersox, Wayne Dapser, Melody Moore, Ross Perkin, and Tammy Shanley - who also serves as the production's director. Producer Judy Hadley and Production Manager Alicia Merel round out the ensemble. "Sometimes we put on the performances in the classrooms, and sometimes, we do the school auditorium instead," said Bowersox, who this time out is playing the famed Caesar-slayer "Brutus," as well as a gender-bending "Olivia" from Twelfth Night. "It kind of depends on how the teachers want to do it, and how many shows we're going to be doing that day. It's more fun for us on a larger stage, but there's also an intimacy in the classroom that's really cool." A prior acting commitment kept Bowersox out of the SIS cast during its first season, but, having performed Shakespeare frequently in his native Philadelphia, he jumped at the chance to become a regular, mostly out of admiration for the world's most famous playwright, but partly out of a desire to turn the kids on to something brilliant and potentially life-changing. "Has there ever been a better dramatist ever?" Bowersox asked. "His plays are classic and timeless, if you can get past the old English. The myriad levels of conflict and the dualities of character are magnificent to play. There's really just nothing better." There more to Shakespeare in the Schools than just a period free of study for fidgety students, however. The day before the performance, Shanley and Hadley visit their future audience in their classroom, typically an English class, and talk to the students about the history of Shakespeare, what it was like to witness a performance of his works in his own day, and the context within which his plays were written. The scenes they're about to witness are also explained to them, as well as the plays they're taken from, so that the students have some idea of what to expect when the lights dim, and the works come to life before their eyes. The students are then asked what they'd like to see performed, and their preferences are taken into consideration when selecting the next year's repertoire. "Typically we'll end up using one of their suggestions," Shanley said. "This year it was Julius Caesar. The students really wanted to see that one." The students are also given space for additional comments, which Shanley has found extremely revealing over the years. "I didn't know Shakespeare wrote comedy," one student wrote. "I didn't know he wrote in our language," another wrote. "This is extremely revealing over the years. "I didn't know Shakespeare wrote comedy," one student wrote. "I didn't know he wrote in our language," quoth another. "This is actually fun," yet another wrote. "Watching it come to life is a totally different experience from just reading it." Finally, the students volunteers are invited to participate in the choreography that characterizes some of Shakespeare's more physical plays, such as "Shrew," during which Petrucio and Katherina act out a true battle of the sexes that occasionally gets physical. "The kids seem to get a real kick out of the stage combat," Shanley said. "It builds excitement for the live performance they're about to see." The whole idea for Shakespeare in the Schools came together from a confluence of ideas. Key West Fringe Theater Artistic Director Monnie King had been organizing a Shakespeare appreciation class around the same time that Shanley and Judy Hadley were talking about somehow getting Shakespeare into the schools. The three put their heads together, and the program was born.

*'CBS This Morning' reports on Eimers' death... Police chief interviewed... BY GWEN FILOSA Citizen Staff
gfilosa@keysnews.com*

A national television news network is set to air a story this morning on Charles Eimers, 61, who died in a hospital Dec. 4, six days after Key West police officers held him facedown in the sand during an arrest.

When freed 1,001 Invention Projects on a CD and my web page

CBS This Morning airs from 7 to 9 a.m. A Miami-based producer did not return a telephone call by presstime requesting a comment or time of airing. Key West Police Chief Donie Lee was interviewed about Eimers' death, which is under review by the state, marking the first time national television has reported on the case, said city spokeswoman Alyson Crean.

When freed 1,001 Invention Projects on a CD and my web page

A news crew was in Key West the week of April 28. The Eimers family sued the city in federal court April 11 for wrongful death, accusing 13 police officers of killing the man who was originally stopped on Thanksgiving morning over an illegal lane change on North Roosevelt Boulevard. Before the officer had concluded the traffic stop, Eimers reportedly drove off in his P.T. Cruiser, leading police on a slow-speed chase through Old Town that ended on the beach where Duval Street ends. A bystander's smart phone video shows Eimers raising his hands in the air and dropping to his knees as police officers close in on him at the beach. But during the handcuffing of Eimers, who was facedown on the ground, he turned blue. Officers immediately turned him over and began life-saving measures, police reports state. Paramedics said Eimers had no pulse when they reached the scene, but Lower Keys Medical Center staff revived him in the emergency room. Eimers remained on a ventilator until he died Dec. 4.

Treavor Eimers of Michigan is Eimers' oldest son and the lead plaintiff in the family's lawsuit, filed by Key West attorney David Paul Horan.

The family's suit names 13 Key West police officers, who the city's attorneys claimed in court papers last week did not violate Eimers' constitutional rights.
