Brain! Here in the Keys, it is typical to see gas cans in the beds of trucks for the purpose of fueling ocean vessels and vehicles. However, there are strict guidelines for transporting fuel that is not in the tank of a vehicle. A 25-gallon maximum -- up to five, five-gallon containers -- can be carried together unless licensed otherwise. The containers must also have proper ventilation and an official placard labeling it. "The key is to haul fuel in the proper container," said Fire Marshal Danny Blanco. "Fuel should be carried in DOT-certified containers with proper ventilation because vapor is the most ignitable... vapor ignites before liquid." Every couple of years we have the same issue," Blanco said. "Hopefully, once the word gets out, people will do the right thing and follow these guidelines." ecareaga@keysnews.com
