8-26-14 "1984 II" MX2 monolayers consist of a single layer of transition metal atoms, such as molybdenum (Mo) or tungsten (W), sandwiched between two layers of chalcogen atoms, such as sulfur (S). The resulting heterostructure is bound by the relatively weak intermolecular attraction known as the van der Waals force. These 2D semiconductors feature the same hexagonal "honeycombed" structure as graphene and superfast electrical conductance, but, unlike graphene, they have natural energy band-gaps. This facilitates their application in transistors and other electronic devices because, unlike graphene, their electrical conductance can be switched off. midway through 2014, the state has already registered 230 quakes of that strength, easily surpassing California as the most earthquake-prone state in the country.

Group Therapy Grin! Group InventSomething Futuristic is more like it! The district has also identified a number of "core apps" for use on the devices. Apple's own iWork suite, iTunes U, iMovie, and iBooks are among those chosen, alongside utility apps like classroom management system Socrative and image manipulation app Skitch. Rather than purchasing the tablets outright, the school district will lease them from Apple. The cost of the program – which also appears to include more than 1,000 MacBooks – will begin at $5.7 million per year for the initial rollout and rise to around $8 million once all 61 schools in the district are outfitted. The St. Paul initiative comes on the heels of the suspension of Apple's $1 billion agreement with the Los Angeles Unified School District, following charges that district administrators tailored the bidding process to benefit Apple and content provider Pearson. Despite the setback, Apple continues to win new rollouts and commands more than 90 percent of the education tablet market.

8-25-14 Superseding EMT will be the MD students. Who will do the brain scan below for injury well as tumors. Description
Electrospray Ionization for Brain Tumor Identification
NBIB-funded researchers have developed a new and more efficient method for screening brain tumors. The method uses a technique called Desorption Electrospray Ionization Mass Spectrometry (DESI MS) to screen for 2-hydroxyglutarate (2-HG), a metabolite which is formed from a mutation in the brain tumor inducing gene IDH. The previous method that was developed 150 years ago required pathologists to take brain tissue samples and then use freezing and staining techniques to differentiate healthy tissue from malignant tumors. However, this process takes around 20 minutes to complete, which is a problem during time dependent surgeries. The new technology employs mass spectrometry to determine the presence of certain metabolites in tissue samples. The tissue samples are sprayed with a charged liquid which then forms into droplets. The droplets are then absorbed into a mass spectrometer where the mass and charge of the metabolites are measured.
