9-12-14 And will now battle to... Yale 9/11 Gasoline Cars at Times Square, All these people named here knew the electricwindmillcar was suppressed by Kennedy + Carter! Though 13 years have passed, Yale continues to remember. At 8:30 a.m., over 100 members of the Yale community gathered at Beinecke Plaza to pay tribute to those who perished in the September 11 attacks. The event was organized through the Yale Student Veterans Council, in conjunction with Yale ROTC, and included a guest speaker, a reading of names and a moment of silence. Though over a decade since the attacks, emotions remained fresh as students, faculty, and alumni grieved for lost loved ones and fellow countrymen - including at least nine Yale alumni killed on this day. Following his address, Harnisch recalled the 3,000 people who died in the attacks and noted that at least nine were Yale alumni. He singled out two individuals - Stacy Sanders '98 and Bradley Hoorn '01 - both new employees working in the Twin Towers on the fateful day. Nine students from across the University standing solemnly alongside the memorial cenotaph then approached the microphone to read a name of a fallen Yale alumni-David Berray '84, David Berry '80, Bennett Fisher '66, Elizabeth M. Gregg GRD '77, Bradley Hoorn '01, Richard Lee '91, Charles McCrann LAW '72, Christopher Murphy '88 and Stacey Sanders '98. At exactly 46 minutes after 8 a.m. -the moment the first tower was struck- those in attendance bowed their heads for a moment of silence.

9/11 Fast Forward at Berkeley Labs, Sandia Labs, Los Alamos Labs... should be give this "Invention Project" by our 1984 Numb-Nutz Dictators... asap too. The application, entitled "Methods of melting and introducing amorphous alloy feedstock for casting and processing," shows a number of ways in which amorphous alloys like Liquidmetal can be melted and injected into manufacturing equipment. It was filed in May of this year. Apple's methods simplify the containment and pouring system necessary to transfer molten alloys. One method adds an additional "branch" to a traditional cold chamber, which contains the metal using water-cooled "fingers" containing a non-wetting surface – surface tension prevents the metal from moving until the fingers are retracted. A second method uses a system not unlike a traditional hot glue gun, holding a solid piece of feedstock in place by a constriction in the feed tube. The feedstock is melted at the constriction point, then flows into the cold sleeve. Apple says that parts formed with these methods have nearly endless application in consumer electronics, from internal parts with dimensions measured in millimeters to full outer casings. The application specifically mentions mobile phones, portable music players, streaming devices, laptop and desktop computers, and watches.
