Electronic Film Breast Cancer Sensor

When freed 1,001 Invention Projects on a CD and my web page

by Joshua Chen on Sep 15, 2014 - Electronic Film Breast Cancer Sensor --- Breast cancer accounts about a third of all cancers diagnosed in women. As with other cancers, early diagnosis is imperative for better prognosis. Current technologies include magnetic resonance imaging systems and ultrasound; however, these techniques can carry high costs. There is also the mammogram, which involves the usage of ionizing X-rays to contrast the denser cancer tissue from the surrounding healthy breast tissue. Although cheaper, mammograms cannot detect less dense cancer tissue that is often found in younger women. Lastly, there is always manually checking for palpability, which is what Dr. Ravi Saraf and Dr. Chieu Van Nguyen used as inspiration for their thin film sensor made out of nanoparticles and polymers. The device was created by layering multiple materials including polyelectrolytes, gold, aluminum, and others into a ~150nm sheet. More than thirty devices were constructed and tested in over one hundred experiments, and they proved to be robust and stable, as they were stored for more than 6 months exposed to the air. The scientists used a silicone material with embedded lumps to mimic the breast for testing. Ultimately, this electronic skin was able to detect lumps that were as small as 5 millimeters and as deep as 20 millimeters. Most manual detection for lumps only finds breast cancer tissue that have grown larger than 20 millimeters. While the American Cancer Society says that there is a 94 percent survival rate if the breast cancer is found when it is less than 10 millimeters in size. Saraf describes this device to also be able to, in the future, detect early signs of melanoma and other cancers.

9-15-14 50 years ago on 9-9-1964 Paul McCartney was in Key West... Mr. MCCARTNEY: I seem to remember we had some time off in Key West, Florida, and it was because there was a hurricane, and we'd been diverted, I think, from Jacksonville. So we had to spend a night or two in Key West, is where we ended up, anyway. And at that age, with that much time on our hands, we really didn't know what to do with it except get drunk. And so that was what we did. And we stayed up all night talking, talking, talking like it was going out of style. And at some point early in the morning, I think we must have touched on some points that were really emotional... Probably our mothers dying, because John and I shared that experience. My mother died when I was about 14, and his died shortly after - about a year or so after. McCartney in 2001, "Here Today", that he wrote for John Lennon.

"We can prevent serious violence and psychopathology among the group of children who are highest-risk," said Duke's Kenneth Dodge. ...lower rates of risky sexual behavior... did he tell her he had STD's? Who gave it to whom murders and fights... Dodge directs the Duke Center for Child and Family Policy and is the William McDougall

Professor of Public Policy at Duke's Sanford School of Public Policy. From first through 10th grade, the Fast Track children received reading tutoring and specialized intervention aimed at improving self-control and social-cognitive skills. Parents learned problem-solving skills through home visits and parent training groups. Aggressive children are less likely to become violent criminals or psychiatrically troubled adults if they receive early intervention, says a new study based on more than two decades of research. These findings from researchers at Duke, Pennsylvania State and Vanderbilt universities and the University of Washington are based on the Fast Track Project, a multi-faceted program that is one of the largest violence-prevention trials ever funded by the federal government

9-14-14 Mandy Miles @ the Citizen Today. On a similar but not entirely related note, I think all household lights should be installed as dimmer switches. Why are these little technological treats reserved for the upper-middle class in their higher-end homes? It's apparently relatively simple nowadays to adjust the brightness of lights, so why are we even given the choice of the more primitive, on-off switches?

9-14-14 Mandy I know you love the Russian Ballet Swan Lake (Russian: Lebedinoye ozero), is a ballet composed by Pyotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky in 1875-1876. The scenario, initially in four acts, was fashioned from Russian folk tales[1] and tells the story of Odette, a princess turned into a swan by an evil sorcerer's curse. The choreographer of the original production was Julius Reisinger. The ballet was premiered by the Bolshoi Ballet on 4 March [O.S. 20 February] at the Bolshoi Theatre in Moscow. Although it is presented in many different versions, most ballet companies base their stagings both choreographically and musically on the 1895 revival of Marius Petipa and Lev Ivanov, first staged for the Imperial Ballet on 15 January 1895, at the Mariinsky Theatre in St. Petersburg. For this revival, Tchaikovsky's score was revised by the St. Petersburg Imperial Theatre's chief conductor and composer Riccardo Drigo.
