Archie Rand likes to work big. He tackles big themes, like history of the Jews. He often paints very large pieces, including murals. And he likes to work in expansive series, like his collection of 54 paintings, one for each parashah, or division, in the Hebrew text of the Torah. But nothing prepared the art world for "The 613," his series, completed in 2008, of 613 paintings, one for each Jewish commandment. Seven years ago, when The New York Times wrote about "The 613," the paintings were hanging in Mr. Rand's warehouse in Brooklyn. No gallery or museum has shown them all. To do that, Mr. Rand had to put the paintings between the covers of a book. "The 613," a wonderfully garish book with one painting per page, will be published next week (Blue Rider, $45).

London will not be getting any MacBook Pro Tread Mill Desk with Target Heart Rate iapps any time soon as the New York Times Today did a Idiots in London article... "A Most British Response to the W.H.O. Study on Processed Meats" By ALAN COWELL In the home of the full English breakfast, health warnings seem only to inspire irreverence and potential denial in scofflaws. Known as the "full English" – a combination of bacon, sausage and egg, with ad hoc + sandwiches slathered in mayo. "Killer in the kitchen," The Sun, a London tabloid, proclaimed this week in a front-page headline above a photograph of a sausage! I will die in a London Hospital costing you $$$ millions + go down with bacon sandwich in hand singing the national anthem." So many earlier alarms – over salt, alcohol, tobacco, saturated fats, sugar, butter, mercury in fish, margarine and eggs? Or red wine, which saves the heart or dooms the body, depending on your perspective? Britons in any case cherish their gallows humor as much as their bacon and eggs. "If I'd known smoking was only as dangerous as eating sausages," a writer on The Guardian's site, "I would have carried on smoking." Of course, there were far-reaching implications in the W.H.O.'s allocation of processed meat category of carcinogens, meaning that "sufficient evidence" had been found of a link with cancer. Britons will heed such advice is unclear. "I mean who cares," said another posting to The Guardian. "We're all going to die of something in the end" – sooner, it now seems, than later. Same Gallows Humor as Iraqi Oil $$$ Oil Revenues Wars + BP Oils $777 Trillion in London + Some women with cancer and others question the worth of all that pink merchandise for Breast Cancer Awareness Month.
