"Inmates Slash Rikers Guard Several Times" By MICHAEL SCHWIRTZ. A correction officer was held down and slashed several times in an attack by several inmates at the Rikers Island jail complex on Thursday, officials said. The attack occurred around 4:30 p.m. A spokeswoman for the New York City Correction Department said the officer, who was not identified, "was the victim of an unprovoked assault with a weapon." He was taken to a hospital, but no details about his condition were released. A person who had been informed of details of the attack, and who spoke on the condition of anonymity because of the continuing investigation, said the officer, with three years on the job, was working in an area housing 18- to 21-year-old inmates. The officer had just opened the cell door for one inmate when that inmate grabbed him in a chokehold and brought him to the ground, the person said. The officer was then attacked by two other inmates who managed to slash him several times, the person said. Judge Approves Settlement of Suit on Rikers Island Brutality. Another person, a law enforcement official who insisted on anonymity, said the officer suffered four deep cuts to his face, head and arm. That official said only two inmates were involved. The attack comes as the city is struggling to control violence at Rikers while also enacting changes intended to address pervasive abuse by guards. Two weeks ago, a federal judge gave final approval to a sweeping settlement requiring thousands of additional surveillance cameras, among other changes. Officers as well as the union that represents them have complained that many of the new provisions, particularly limits on the use of solitary confinement and physical force, were made without their advice and could leave jail employees vulnerable. "On the eve of the release of new 'use of force' guidelines from the Department of Correction, which we were not consulted on, one of our members is laying in a hospital bleeding from multiple slash wounds to his head and face," Norman Seabrook, president of the guards' union, said.

'Defensive Medicine' May Lower Malpractice Risks... By Nicholas Bakalar Some doctors practice "defensive medicine," ordering extra tests and procedures believing this will ward off malpractice suits. A new study suggests that it does. Using data on 24,637 physicians and more than 18 million hospital admissions in Florida between 2000 and 2009, researchers found that the more a hospital billed, the less likely the doctor was to be sued. For example, among the one-fifth of general surgeons who billed the least, the rate of malpractice claims was 2.3 percent, while among the one-fifth who billed the most, the rate was 0.4 percent.
