3-30-2016 "Yacht Vacations: Not Just for the Rich" In Transit By SHIVANI VORA Key West futuristic Yacht Invention Vacations; Just in Time for the Gravity Engine conversation with the wife's, grin. A vacation on a yacht may conjure up images of billionaires and celebrities, but it's not just for the rich and famous. Several companies offer seven-day yacht charters for $10,000 or less; most of the boats have multiple bedrooms and are suited for families and groups. Travelers can either hire a captain or sail the vessel themselves. In Boca Raton, Fla., Yachtico has an inventory of 5,000 yachts in hundreds of destinations worldwide, including the South of France and Cuba's southern coast, that cost $5,000 or less to charter for a week. A six-bedroom, 46-foot-long catamaran to sail along the Dalmatian Coast in Croatia, for example, starts at $4,900; a captain costs an additional $193 a day. Airport transfers are included. The Moorings in Clearwater, Fla., manages a fleet of 400 boats in 20 destinations including the Bahamas and the Greek Islands. It has several wallet-friendly models, like a 38-foot, three-bedroom yacht available for a weeklong sail around Tahiti; it is equipped with a kitchen, air-conditioning, a flat-screen television, a spacious living room, several outdoor decks and snorkel gear and costs $9,800, including a captain. Massive fire's race up the exterior of the 63-story The Address Downtown Dubai, again and again and again... wow!

3-29-2016 Dubai - Bill + Melinda Gates have their second home in Dubai. Ajman One development in Ajman, a city that's home to many commuters who work in the Gulf commercial hub of Dubai, further to the south. The complex, developed for an estimated $720 million by Aqaar, is home to 12 residential towers. Two sustained severe damage to their exteriors, while others appeared to have light damage. The cause for the blaze, which began Monday night, wasn't immediately clear. Civil defense officials declined to immediately comment, while telephone numbers for Aqaar rang unanswered Tuesday. The state-run WAM news agency said Ajman's ruler, Sheikh Humaid bin Rashid Al Nuaimi, visited the complex Tuesday and praised fire fighters' efforts to put out the fire. He also ordered authorities to accommodate those affected until they find housing, WAM reported. The blaze comes less than three months after a massive fire raced up the exterior of the 63-story The Address Downtown Dubai, one of Dubai's most prominent hotels. It is situated next to Dubai's biggest mall and the Burj Khalifa, the world's tallest skyscraper. Similar fires have struck other high-rises built since the turn of this century in Dubai and Sharjah, which sits between Dubai and Ajman. Building and safety experts have attributed the spate of fires to a material commonly used to cover the buildings known as aluminum composite panel cladding. Some panels used in buildings in the Emirates contain a flammable core that can burn rapidly once ignited, allowing fires to spread quickly on buildings covered top to bottom with the panels without sufficient fire breaks along the way. It was not immediately clear if the skyscraper in the Ajman fire had that type of cladding, but the fire in appeared to burn in a similar fashion to the other blazes.

Key West news, I told Jimmy Weekly I flew into Key West to build the Yale Key West Medical school as he was cutting up red meat, and asked him how his heart was... OK! Grin. This was 4 1/2 years ago and I still haven't got past the building codes in KW politics to build the Yale Key West Medical School. Fausto's Food Palace turns 90 in April The identity of Key West begins and ends with local businesses—even in the wake of retail chains, convenient stores and the mega-corporations that continue to invade the island. Yet for one local outfit, which has survived and flourished in the face of many corporate challengers; Fausto's Food Palace has embodied the ideals of family, community and hard work in Southernmost City for close to a century. Fausto's signature motto is “Food Palace,” but for locals, the island grocery has been so much more. This year marks the 90th year the family owned and operated business has given Key West not just groceries, but a community epicenter. Operated by the same family for almost a century, Jimmy and Alton Weekley are the fourth generation to nurture the success of one the island's most beloved brands. Faustino (Fausto) Castillo came to Key West in 1910 to work in a cigar factory. By 1926 he opened his own grocery store, Fausto's, on Virginia and Packer streets (current location of The Flaming Buoy Restaurant). Fausto would marry a local, Ana Alvarez, and have one daughter, Ana Luisa. Business began to expand and the family moved Fausto's to 600 Fleming Street, which is now the Marquesa hotel. Fausto's wife Ana passed away, leaving teenage Ana to help her father with the store. She finished her high school education at The Convent of Mary Immaculate and took to running the business by age of 17 with her father. In the 1940's, father and daughter dreamed of a bigger store and moved to the landmark property at 522 Fleming Street. While working, Ana met a Navy sailor named Carl Weekley, who stopped by to layup supplies for the ship. During this time, it was Ana, still a young woman, who managed to secure a bank loan to purchase the Fleming Street property and marry Carl, who happened to be a trained meat cutter. But like many young men in the 1940's, Carl was shipped overseas to serve in WWII, leaving behind a pregnant Ana to run the store. Describing his mother, Alton Weekley called her a “4 feet, 11 inch dynamo”, which explains the continued success and growth of the business during trying times. And on an island domineered by businessmen, an undeterred Ana quickly became respected as an equal by other business owners. Early on she took charge by either fighting code compliance for their new property, or later threatening to put a lien on the Pier House when David Wolkowsky tried to put off paying his grocery bill with a Key lime pie. “As hard as she could be, she was just as sensitive,” said Jimmy Weekley about his mother. As a fiery guardian of the business, Ana also had a benevolent heart. When Key West's economy suffered during WWII, Ana and Carl forgave grocery bills for families in hardship. Carl would even slip extra flour and sugar rations for families to celebrate birthdays. . “Ana would send pies to St. Mary's,” said the Basilica's Father John Baker with a reminiscing smile. “What made it so personal was she figured out what kind of pies we all liked and sent her sons to deliver them. She would send food to the soup kitchen and prepare Thanksgiving baskets every year for those in need.” In 1948, Fausto Castillo passed away leaving the business to the Weekleys. They took the reins and Ana renamed it Fausto's Food Palace as her father's legacy. Ana and Carl had four sons, two of which, Alton and Jimmy, carry the family torch. Both left Key West for other adventures, but returned home by the 1970s to begin working for their parents. Jimmy followed in his parent's footsteps and also met his wife, Susan, in the store when she took a job there in 1977. Ana and Carl fostered the family's civic-minded tendencies. The sons learned to give back and also became immersed in the community. Jimmy not only ran Fausto's, but also the City — he's a former Mayor of Key West and a current City Commissioner. Alton also served as City Commissioner, as well as president of Rotary Club and longtime member of Chamber of Commerce, along with many other organizations both brothers remain involved with today. Carl passed away in 2002 and Ana in 2011, both actively involved in their store, their community and their family to the end. Now the fourth generation of Weekley's are continuing the tradition as Alton's son, "J," works with him at Fausto's White Street as assistant manager. And Dakin, son of Jimmy and Susan, is assistant manager at Fleming Street. Jimmy's grandson, Jake, 14 has asked to work at Fausto's this coming summer, which would mark the fifth generation to embark on the family legacy. When asked about secret to Fausto's success, both brothers replied in unison, "It's in our blood." A fitting answer to a cherished business in the bloodline in a city it helped shape.

3-29-2016 Yale Medical School News Today... I didn't ask Jimmy Weekley about this... New Yale research points to potential treatments for pancreatic cancer, a disease that only 7 percent of patients survive for more than five years after diagnosis. Building off of previous research that had identified the protein renalase as an important growth factor in the body, researchers examined pancreatic tumors to see if cancer cells overexpressed this protein. Looking at pancreatic tumors in mice, researchers confirmed that many of the tumors did overexpress renalase, and tumors with more elevated renalase expression had worse prognoses than tumors that did not overexpress renalase, according to the study. To determine whether reducing renalase expression in tumors could effectively treat pancreatic cancer in mice, researchers synthesized antibodies that bind to renalase and block its expression. The treatment killed tumor cells. Researchers said these findings point to research focused on developing a similar treatment suitable for combating pancreatic cancer in humans. "Because renalase is a growth factor, we hypothesized that cancer cells could hijack its signaling pathway to sustain and promote cancer growth," said Gary Desir MED '80, study co-author and interim chair of medicine and professor at the School of Medicine. The researchers' findings — that tumors did overexpress renalase, and that countering renalase with these monoclonal antibodies, meaning they originated from a unique parent cell, reduced tumor growth — support this hypothesis, he added. Desir discovered the protein renalase in previous research while investigating why patients with chronic kidney disease often develop severe linked or associated -heart disease, which accounts for 50 percent of the deaths in that population. By selecting for previously unknown proteins synthesized by the kidney, researchers identified a protein that circulated in high levels in plasma of healthy individuals and that was reduced in patients with CKD, he said. This previously unknown protein was renalase, the same protein that pancreatic cancer cells overexpressed. In pancreatic cancer patients, renalase produced by tumors "alter[s] the tumor environment in a way that hides tumor cells from our immune system and protects them from immune-mediated cell death," Desir said. According to the American Cancer Society, risk factors for pancreatic cancer include tobacco use, being overweight or obese, being exposed to certain pesticides, having diabetes or being older than 65 years of age. Certain inheritable genetic mutations may also play a role in promoting the onset of pancreatic cancer. Because pancreatic cancer often does not cause any signs or symptoms until it is quite advanced, the disease is usually not detected until it has already reached late stages of growth. When symptoms do appear, they may include jaundice, loss of appetite, depression or upper abdominal pain. Pancreatic cancer accounts for 3 percent of cancers and 7 percent of cancer deaths, Desir said. According to a January press release from the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network, this year in the United States deaths from pancreatic cancer are expected to surpass deaths from breast cancer. In the press release, Julie Fleshman, CEO and president of the Pancreatic Cancer Action Network, said the awareness movement need to be “focused on research” that could “result in new treatment options and better outcomes for patients battling this disease.” In the same release, Gloria Petersen, a professor of epidemiology in the Mayo Clinic College of Medicine, said that “it will take a dedicated research effort to bring urgently needed progress to this disease.” Desir said the team is currently modifying the monoclonal antibodies to make them suitable for use in humans, and that the team plans to carry out studies in patients with pancreatic cancer and melanoma. They have submitted a paper describing the role of renalase in melanoma and the efficacy of anti-renalase therapy in animal models, which should be published in the near future, he added. Almost 50,000 Americans will be diagnosed with pancreatic cancer this year!

3-28-2016 "Divergent" 5 Yale Hospital Movie... grin! Yale + Harvard both pass OJ Clones that really don't pass too. The University faces a lawsuit seeking over $15,000 in damages after Milford resident Deborah Craven filed a legal complaint on March 14 in the Connecticut Superior Court against the Yale School of Medicine and Yale-New Haven Hospital for a botched surgery. Anthony Kim and Ricardo Quarrie, the Yale cardiothoracic surgeon and surgeon-in-training who directed the procedures, are also included as defendants in the suit. In May 2015, Kim and Quarrie performed a procedure to remove a precancerous lesion from Craven's eighth rib at Yale-New Haven Hospital. Although the eighth rib was marked with a metal coil and dye, the doctors mistakenly removed part of Craven's seventh rib, leading to severe back pain caused by the coil rubbing against the musculature of her back. After the mistake became apparent, Craven, 60, had to undergo a second surgery the following day. The lawsuit alleges that Quarrie — who at the time was completing his medical residency in Yale-New Haven — tried to cover up the surgical mishap by telling Craven that he had not removed enough of her eighth rib. "The fact that the surgical team operated on the wrong rib despite a clear indication of the proper site is, of course, negligent," said Craven's attorney, Joel Faxon of Faxon Law Group in New Haven. Craven claimed that the cover-up had taken place among the medical staff at Yale-New Haven Hospital. Although Kim, the lead surgeon, admitted to Craven that a mistake had occurred, Quarrie misinformed Craven of the reason for a second surgery, telling her that not enough of her rib had been removed. Additionally, according to the complaint, Craven's husband requested that only Kim be involved in the second surgery because he did not believe Quarrie was trustworthy after the initial mistake. However, medical records obtained by Craven's legal team show Quarrie was indeed involved in the second surgery. Faxon said that even though Craven herself is a health care worker, her anger at this "abuse" led Craven to seek legal action with Faxon in the fall of last year. "She's gotten to the point where there's only so much you can take," Faxon said. "Had they come to her before and said, 'Look we made a mistake, we want to fix the mistake, here's what happened, everything is going to be alright' — if that had occurred at Yale, this never would have resulted in a lawsuit. Only the deceit, cover up and lying after the fact in addition to that, that made her blood boil to the point where she said 'Something has to be done here.” This lack of candor led to the additional lawsuit allegation of unfair trade practice — the use of deceptive, fraudulent or unethical methods to obtain business, which Faxon said is very rare. Faxon added that of the thousands of cases he has handled, he can recall only two that involved an unfair trade practices allegation. Mark D’Antonio, Yale-New Haven Hospital media coordinator, released a statement defending the hospital’s practices and disputing Craven’s claims, arguing that Craven was made aware of the mistake at the time it occurred. “Yale-New Haven Hospital and Yale Medical Group are committed to providing the safest and highest quality of care possible,” the statement said. “With respect to the case of Ms. Craven, we recognized that an error was made, we informed and apologized to the patient, and we immediately reported it to the Connecticut Department of Public Health.” D’Antonio declined to comment further on the case. As a result of state law, before filing a lawsuit, Craven and Faxon had to have the case reviewed by a board-certified physician who specializes in the same field as the accused, Faxon said. That surgeon, who is not identified for legal reasons, provided Craven and Faxon with a certificate of good faith affirming the legitimacy of the lawsuit. The surgeon said the care Craven received “deviated from appropriate standards,” noting that Craven’s doctors should have done more to ensure that the surgery was properly executed. “Dr. Kim and his resident/fellow, Dr. Ricardo Quarrie, failed to meet the standard of care expected of a thoracic surgeon in operating on the wrong rib because he failed to confirm the correct rib intraoperatively with an X-ray or fluoroscopy,” the anonymous surgeon said. An intraoperative fluoroscopy — an imaging technique that uses X-rays to obtain moving images — is an appropriate technique commonly used in operations that would have revealed to doctors that the metal coil was still in Craven’s eighth rib. However, the radiology equipment at Yale-New Haven, which would have been used to perform the fluoroscopy, was “broken or busted or defective,” Faxon said. He added that this was not disclosed to Craven at the time of her surgery. Yale-New Haven Hospital’s statement acknowledged that mistakes in a medical organization are inevitable. “Even in the best organizations medical errors may occur,” the statement said. “When they do, our goal is to acknowledge them, learn from them and ensure that we minimize any chance that they ever occur again.” Neither Kim nor Quarrie, who remain affiliated with the University, could be reached for comment. Craven’s lawsuit will most likely be settled outside of court or go to trial in about two years, Faxon said. He added that the vast majority of cases handled by his firm are settled outside of court rather than by a jury or by arbitration. The next step in the case involves Faxon’s collecting depositions, which may include testimony or documentation, from Kim, Quarrie, an administrative representative of the hospital and possibly others involved in Craven’s medical treatment. Yale-New Haven Hospital was founded in 1826.
